Policy version	v1
Effective	September 15, 2026
Notice issued	September 16, 2026
Packet generated	September 16, 2026

What this is

Personal Rights Management records my standing instructions, authorizations, and objections concerning downstream processing of personal information associated with me. This notice does not independently create legal rights or obligations where none otherwise exist, and nothing in it overrides a valid court order, statutory mandate, or other controlling legal authority.

I recognize that lawful initial observation may occur. My policy distinguishes that initial observation from subsequent retention, historical search, aggregation, correlation, sharing, profiling, inference, commercialization, and other secondary processing.

My policy

The following is generated from the machine-readable policy identified above. It is not a separate summary that could drift from the signed document.

Not objected to

- Initial observation

Not objected to, but only on these terms

- Immediate automated comparison
Hotlist comparison only; no retention beyond the moment of comparison.
- Law-enforcement use retention limited to 60 days; requires legal process; requires written notice to me; only for: active investigation.
- Emergency use
requires written notice to me.
- Retention of a read after comparison no retention beyond the moment of use; no recipients.

- Deletion after purpose completion
no retention beyond the moment of use.

Objected to absent separate legal authority or my authorization

- Historical location storage and search
- Aggregation and cross-database correlation
- Behavioral profiling
- Derived movement inference
- Third-party sharing
- Sale
- Commercialization
- Advertising
- AI / model training
- Biometric processing

What I am asking

Please associate this Personal Rights Management policy with records reasonably identifiable as relating to me and honor the stated instructions and objections to the extent permitted by applicable law, policy, contract, and technical capability.

Legal effect

Personal Rights Management records my standing instructions, authorizations, and objections concerning downstream processing of personal information associated with me. This notice does not independently create legal rights or obligations where none otherwise exist, and nothing in it overrides a valid court order, statutory mandate, or other controlling legal authority.

If any portion of this policy cannot or will not be honored, this notice should still be treated as a record of my express position and non-consent regarding those downstream uses.

Records this concerns

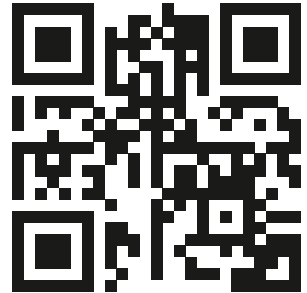

Provided so you can associate this policy with the correct records. It does not appear in my published policy, which contains only a cryptographic commitment to it.

Why there are two policy digests

The policy digest identifies the document. It is computed over a canonical form, so reformatting the JSON does not change it. The byte digest identifies the exact bytes delivered, and does change if a single character moves. Recording both means this notice pins not only which policy was issued, but which exact file you received.

What a signature here does and does not prove

The signatures prove that the holder of this PRM account authored these documents, and that they have not been altered since. They do not prove the account belongs to any named person: PRM performs no identity checking. They also do not prove this notice reached you — the delivery record states what the sender asserts, not what PRM witnessed.

This PDF is not the signed document

This file is a human-readable rendering. The signed artifacts are the JSON documents identified above. If this PDF and those documents ever disagree, the signed documents govern, and the digests printed here are what tie the two together.
